2. Read the seen passage given below and answer the questions that follow :

All this had made Mano Majra very conscious of trains. Before daybreak, the mail train rushes through on its way to Lahore and as it approaches the bridge, the driver invariably blows two long blasts of the whistle. In an instant, all Mano Majra comes awake. Crows begin to caw in the Keekar trees. Bats fly back in long silent relays and begin to quarrel for their perches in the peepul. The mullah of the mosque knows that it is time for the morning prayer. He has a quick wash, stands facing west towards Mecca and with his fingers in his ears cries in long sonorous notes "Allah-ho Akbar". The priest at the Sikh temple lies in bed till the mullah has called. Then he too gets up, draws as close as bucket of water from the well in the temple courtyard, pours it over himself, and intones his prayer in monotonous sing-song to the sound of splashing water.
